One magnificent evening, the 30th July (that is three weeks after our departure), the frigate was at Cape Blanc, thirty miles to leeward of the coast of Patagonia. We had crossed the tropic of Capricorn. The Straits of Magellan opened less than seven hundred miles to the south. Before eight days were over the Abraham Lincoln would be ploughing the waters of the Pacific. Seated on the poop, Ned Land and I were chatting of one thing and another as we looked at this mysterious sea, whose great depths had up to now been inaccessible to the eye of man. I naturally led up the conversation to the giant unicorn, and examined the various chances of success or failure of the expedition. But, seeing that Ned Land let me speak without saying himself, I pressed him more closely. "Well, Ned," said I, "is it possible that you are not convinced of the existence of this cetacean that we are following? Have you any particular reason for being so incredulous?" He looked at me fixedly for some moments before answering, struck his broad forehead with his hand (a habit which he always had). "I HAVE YOU ANY PARTICULAR REASON FOR BEING SO INCREDULOUS?"
